Fratricide: When Brothers Turn

It's no secret that Russia and Ukraine have had an uneasy relationship (to say the least) since the creation of the USSR in 1922, due to the failed brainchild of a wealthy philosopher responsible for the death of millions of our Aryan brothers and sisters, and of millions of our non-Aryan brothers and sisters. I am sorry to say, I believed the Russians and the Ukrainians were going to all-out war back in 2014, when Russia annexed the Crimean Peninsula from Ukraine.

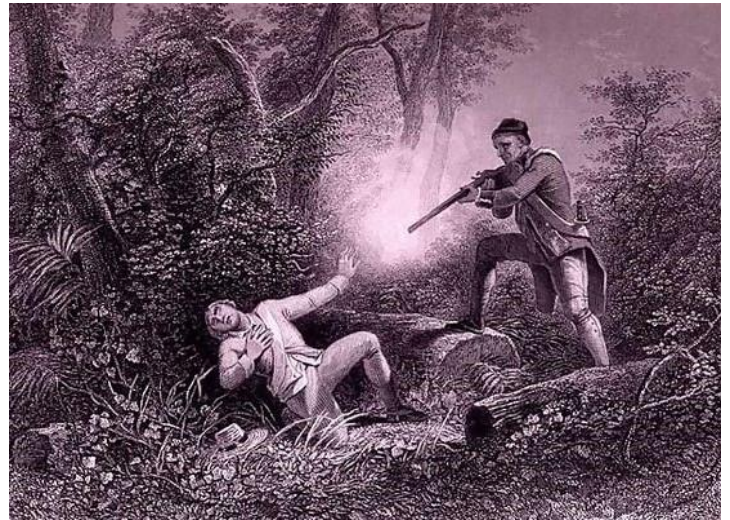

Even though some would consider Russians as more Slavic than Aryan, the Aryan race is part of Southern Russia, also known as Cossacks (and this was confirmed back in 1942 by the SS). So yes, northern Russians are not the descendants of Ostgoths, and so are Slavs; same with a small population of Ukrainians. However, there are still Aryans in both countries, and the in-fighting between our brotherly race should be forth held from happening. This fratricide is unacceptable for our race.

Ukraine has accused Russian President Vladimir Putin of trying to conquer the world, whereas President Putin pointed towards the geopolitical efforts of NATO and the military the organization has built up. Granted, President Putin only cares for his personal agendas, hence he can flip-flop on issues and have the Jewish Oligarchy of large companies in his pocket. Putin has also been elected for four terms of presidency, each one being 6-years long, with a 6-year gap between the two two-term gaps, with his most recent term ending in 2024.

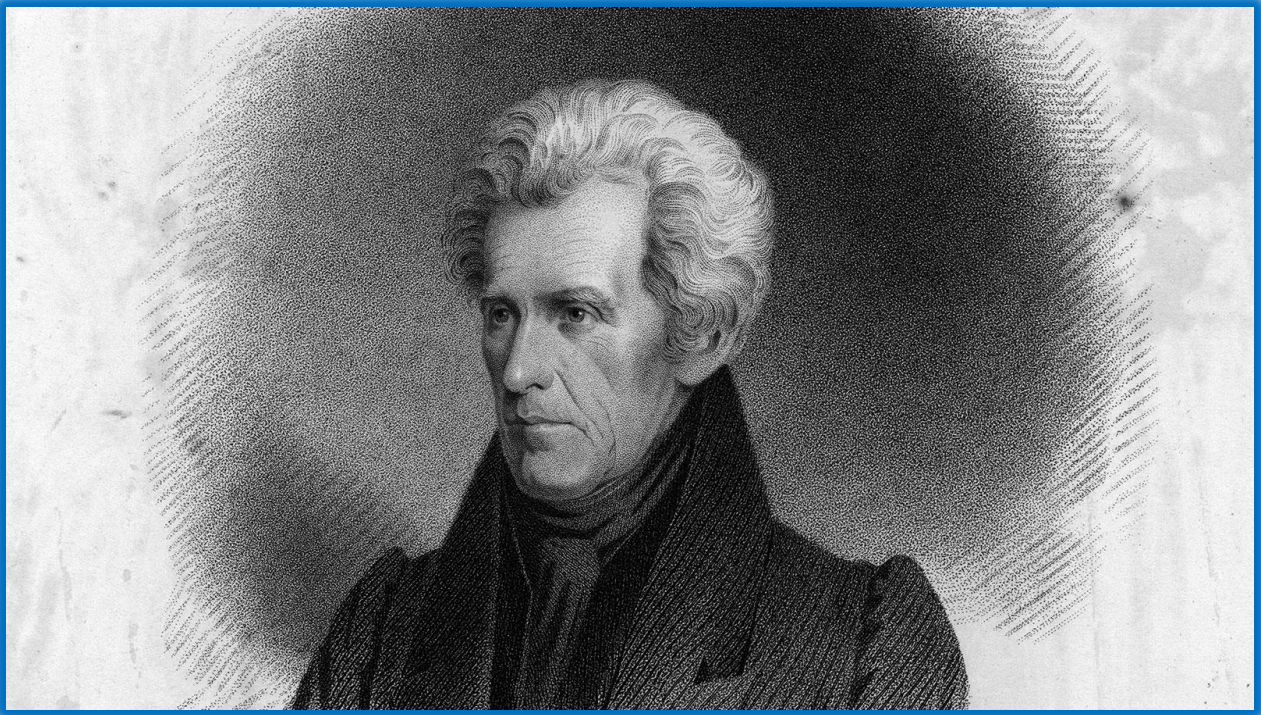

Meanwhile, the Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, a Jew who was elected in 2019, has found himself in a predicament that preceded him: the former comedian/actor is now in almost a North/South Korean-like predicament with little squabbles and firefights. The Jewish President of Ukraine is an Independent, one whose term ends in 2024. Israel managed to kick out Netanyahu from his podium, but instead instituted another Jewish Prime Minister, one with even clearer American ties.

The militarism on the borders between the two nations seems similar to the beginning of the First Great War, which started in 1914, ended in 1918 with an armistice, and was finally officially over in 1919; hopefully, if a war does break out, the Communist Jews of Ukraine do not overthrow the government in an effort for themselves, nor the Communists create another 8-decade long reign over Russia again. We will fight these Communists, when and where we must. In America, the CPUSA seems to only be concerned with the recent debates about abortion, mentioning little about the Ukraine-Russian conflict. DO NOT BE CONFUSED! These Communists are tricky and like to hide behind banners.

President Jackson, the Seventh President of the United States, often called “Old Hickory” and known for his iron fist and policy. Comrades, this President is one we should admire: his sense of justice called him to become a lawyer, and his sense of duty called him to be – like George Lincoln Rockwell – a member of the military (however Jackson would become a General in the Army). Even though he believed heavily in States Rights and not much in Federal Power, the work he did to secure the existence of the White culture in Early America is unforgettable.

When President Jackson took up politics, he did so in the Senate and won the support of the people due to his military service and vibrant personality (who does that remind you of?). Jackson was elected President of the United States in the year 1829, defeating political rival and former President John Quincy Adams. Once in office, Jackson faced problems with the Bank of America: namely, the Bank wanted him (or rather his political career) to die, so Jackson killed the Bank. In addition to the Bank issue, President Jackson also had to deal with the native tribes, down in the Appalachian Mountains, and the expansion of White culture.

Culture is a frail thing, often blended together and mixed, almost never remaining pure (kind of like the fusion restaurants you see, where Asian food can be mixed with Surf N’ Turf). Over in this land, we have Oktoberfest, Alpine Fest, all these different conventions celebrating the medieval cultures of our peoples, but they have been changed over time to fit the contemporary needs. This is also common with the Negroids: their “Kwanzaa Celebration” wasn’t a thing until the mid-1960s, after the Civil Rights movement. Down in the states of Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida, where the general flow of the White population was heading, were the Native American tribes of the Seminole, Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cree. Almost as if President Jackson had heard the Fourteen Words, he signed removal treatises with these tribes (and ten-thousandfold more) where the land they occupied would be reimbursed with land on the opposite side of (or the West side of) the Mississippi River, called “Indian Territory” until the Sooners came in and founded Oklahoma.

President Jackson’s legacy has been attacked for this Indian Removal Act of 1830, labeling him as an evil racist who owned slaves. Yes, he owned slaves, and so did some Cherokee. Media and education are telling people to hate those who preserve their heritage. An Aryan man, one with astute character and outstanding credentials, is attacked for preserving his heritage, race, and culture, by his own kind. Et tu, Brute? The man who had adopted Native American children, who, in an effort to save his culture (and in effect, the Native Americans' as well), is attacked for the forced migration of the native peoples. It is accurate that it is called the "Trail of Tears" because of all these contemporary attacks and whining against preserving one's culture and race. Fast-forward a century and some change, and the government, under the GOP (and, keep in mind, President Jackson was an old-style Democrat), the government implemented forced bussing for minorities, forcing them to attend a school they didn't want to, for the sake of "diversity".

Even though President Jackson was born and died before the birth of the Führer, President Jackson still understood the Fourteen Words and sought to enact them to the best of his abilities. Despite his stance on states' rights and federal power, President Jackson should still be admired by us for his Will to the Fourteen Words. His individual character, one marked by hardship, war, and poverty, shows us his struggle and how it is similar to ours. The Twenty-Dollar Bill should have more meaning to us now when we spend it on our cause, or just to survive everyday life. Modern politics has those filthy Communists calling a Jew-supporter like Trump a fascist and a Nazi. The fog and mirrors of modern politics are so thick and glazed, to get clarity, we need to look back in our history; President Jackson promoted rugged individualism, a common source of identity, based on one's culture, and the urge to save one's kin.

Even in the early years of this nation, we were racially essentially one people. As our race and culture were tainted over time by the foreigners who decided to stay and not assimilate, our politics began to change. We used to duel, now we banter. If we are to revitalize the culture of our Aryan people, we must do so publicly! Segregation of cultures and of peoples seems to be necessary to embrace such a change since the "wonderful" diversity the Jewish media flaunts proudly is responsible for this corruption. Furthermore, it would only make sense that, in this new government, citizenship is only eligible to those Aryan people, a privilege to behold, one that can be taken away, and one not given via location of one's birth, which causes many illegal aliens to travel here and seek visas on the basis of filial or maternal relation to a citizen.

No matter how padded our wallets are, we are Aryans first! It's national SOCIALISM, one where we Whites help lift each other up when we are down, one where our money is used for OUR betterment, and not for the betterment of the Negroid or unfit races. President Jackson, despite having adoptive filial relations with a Native American, ensured an area where White men and women can live peacefully without being compromised by making arrangements for a long-term policy nodding towards the aims of the Aryan race (despite the Indian Wars taking place 50-60 years later, which were won by the White race). These previous statements are very similar to what the American Nazi Party believes and states publicly; these statements being just a logical process of actions needed to revert our people and culture back to WHAT IT SHOULD BE!

AWAY from the foreign influence!

AWAY from the corruption of Judeo-Capitalism!

AWAY from cultural disintegration!

And UP to re-embrace our past! UP to an Aryan society! UP to Freedom! UP to Unity!

Hail Victory!

A German History Lesson

By Dan Schneider

Many people are totally unaware that there was a German Communist republic besides East Germany. It was called the Volga German Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic. It was in Russia along the Kazakhstan border where there were a lot of ethnic Germans living.

It was one of the first actions the new Soviet government took following the first anniversary of the Russian Revolution. It was founded in October, 1918 and originally called the Volga German Workers' Commune. Most non-Russians in the Soviet Union were treated as second class citizens. This gave the ethnic Germans a special status equal to Russians - at least as long as they stayed in the area given to them. It became the first national autonomous unit in the Soviet Union after the Donetsk–Krivoy Rog Soviet Republic.

It was declared an official autonomous republic in 1924 and had a population of about 2 million. Naturally the only political party allowed was the Communist Party.

By January 1, 1941, the Volga German Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic included the city of Engels and 22 cantons: Baltersky, Gmelinsky, Gnadenflyursky, Dobrinsky, Zelmansky, Zolotovsk, Ilovatsky, Kamensky, Krasnoyarsky, Krasnokutsky, Kukkussky, Lizandergeysky, Marientalsky, Marxshadtsky, Pallasovsky, Staro-Poltavsky, Ternovsky, Untervaltsky, Fedorovsky, Franksy, Ekgeimsky and Erlenbakhsky.

When Hitler put Operation Barbarossa into effect and the German invasion of Russia began, Stalin abolished the Volga German Autonomous SSR out of fear they would side with Germany. The ethnic Germans were exiled to Kazakh SSR (now Kazakhstan), Altai, and Siberia. Most were placed in concentration camps. Many of them died there.

After World War II, the situation improved for the survivors. Following the death of Stalin in 1953, all charges were dropped against the ethnic Germans and their exile status was revoked. However, the Volga German Autonomous SSR was not reestablished because of the formation of the German Communist state of East Germany.

In 1964, the Soviet government publicly acknowledged their guilt in persecuting an innocent people during World War II.

Beginning in the early 1980s and accelerating after the fall of the Soviet Union, many Volga Germans have emigrated to Germany by taking advantage of the German law of return, a policy which grants citizenship to all those who can prove to be a refugee or expellee of German ethnic origin or as the spouse or descendant of such a person.

The unsuccessful August 1991 coup against Gorbachev sealed the fate of the Soviet Union. A few days after the coup, Ukraine and Belarus declared their independence from the Soviet Union. The Baltic States, which had earlier declared their independence, sought international recognition.

With the reunification of Germany on October 3, 1990, Berlin was reinstated as the capital city of a united Germany. Germany was once again one nation. Unfortunately, by the 21st Century they faced a different kind of invasion. The beginning of mass immigration from Africa and the Middle East could very well mean the end of the Fatherland as we know it. It may already be too late, but if the true German people are to save their Fatherland they must act NOW. The time for waiting is over. Deutschland über alles!

Nazis: In Service to Comprehensive Communities

By Richard Wagner

Not a day goes by without some unhinged kosher conservative crying “Nazi!” For ersatz patriots it is the supreme, irrefutable putdown. So, naturally, the epithet has gone viral in the face of mandated masks and COVID vaccines.

The federal government chimes in, too. Under Donald Trump’s FBI, “neo-Nazis” were elevated to the same threat level as ISIS terrorists. More recently, crackpot Congresswoman Marjorie Taylor Greene, R-Ga., compared Joe Biden’s vaccine campaign to Nazi “brown shirts.”

For sure, the ongoing obsession with Nazism keeps the name out there. And, frankly, it’s amusing those brown shirts (along with black shirts, presumably) continue to live rent-free in so many demented craniums. Yet it’s no laughing matter -- though many Nazi poseurs do their worst to make a joke of it.

The gross misapprehension of National Socialism calls for a measure of pushback. And this demands a thoughtful and unapologetic grounding as to what a Nazi actually is.

When, for example, a big-city mayor is branded a “Nazi” for locking down businesses in an attempt to halt the spread of the coronavirus, it begs three questions, at least.

- Is the policy based on actual science?
- Does it benefit and support the White worker?
- Will it build a stronger and more coherent community?

Unless the answer to each query is an unequivocal “yes!” then the program is a species of Marxian mania that is unscientific, anti-White and thoroughly destructive to societal order. The mayor is not a Nazi; he/she is practicing free-floating Marxism.

Neocons, libertarians and other inferior thinkers who claim to see Nazis behind every bush are willfully blind to the satanic works of communists who are, indeed, everywhere. The primitive selfishness and nihilistic greed engendered by the capitalist system fatally obscures man’s vision and debases his humanity – just as Marx and Engels foretold.

Adolf Hitler saw higher levels of social organization with crystal clarity. In Mein Kampf, our sagacious Führer meditated at length on “Man and Nature”:

“In the most primitive living creatures the instinct of self-preservation does not go beyond concern for their own ego. In this condition the animal lives only for himself, seeks food only for his present hunger, and fights only for his own life. Every basis is lacking for the formation of a group. ... In the lowest peoples of the earth this quality is present only to a very slight extent, so that often they do not go beyond the formation of the family. The greater the readiness to subordinate purely personal interests, the higher rises the ability to establish comprehensive communities.

“The self-sacrificing will to give one's personal labor and if necessary one's own life for others is most strongly developed in the Aryan. The Aryan is not greatest in his mental qualities as such, but in the extent of his willingness to put all his abilities in the service of the community. In him the instinct of self-preservation has reached the noblest form, since he willingly subordinates his own ego to the life of the community and, if the hour demands, even sacrifices it.

“Not in his intellectual gifts lies the source of the Aryan's capacity for creating and building culture. If he had just this alone, he could only act destructively, in no case could he organize; for the innermost essence of all organization requires that the individual renounce putting forward his personal opinion and interests and sacrifice both in favor of a larger group [emphasis mine]. Only by way of this general community does he again recover his share. Now, for example, he no longer works directly for himself, but with his activity articulates himself with the community, not only for his own advantage, but for the advantage of all.

“The most wonderful elucidation of this attitude is provided by his word 'work,' by which he does not merely mean activity for maintaining life in itself, but exclusively a creative effort that does not conflict with the interests of the community. Otherwise he designates human activity, in so far as it serves the instinct of self-preservation without consideration for his fellow men, as theft, usury, robbery, burglary, etc.

“This state of mind, which subordinates the interests of the ego to the conservation of the community, is really the first premise for every truly human culture. From it alone can arise all the great works of mankind, which bring the founder little reward, but the richest blessings to posterity. Yes, from it alone can we understand how so many are able to bear up faithfully under a scanty life which imposes on them nothing but poverty and frugality, but gives the community the foundations of its existence. Every worker, every peasant, every inventor, official, etc., who works without ever being able to achieve any happiness or prosperity for himself, is a representative of this lofty idea, even if the deeper meaning of his activity remains hidden in him.

“What applies to work as the foundation of human sustenance and all human progress is true to an even greater degree for the defense of man and his culture. In giving one's own life for the existence of the community lies the crown of all sense of sacrifice. It is this alone that prevents what human hands have built from being overthrown by human hands or destroyed by Nature. Our own German language possesses a word which magnificently designates, this kind of activity: Pflichterfüllung (fulfillment of duty); it means not to be self-sufficient but to serve the community.

“[Such] idealism does not represent a superfluous expression of emotion, but that in truth it has been, is, and will be, the premise for what we designate as human culture, yes, that it alone created the concept of ‘man.’ It is to this inner attitude that the Aryan owes his position in this world, and to it the world owes man; for it alone formed from pure spirit the creative force which, by a unique pairing of the brutal fist and the intellectual genius, created the monuments of human culture [emphasis mine]. Without his idealistic attitude all, even the most dazzling faculties of the intellect, would remain mere intellect as such - - outward appearance without inner value, and never creative force.

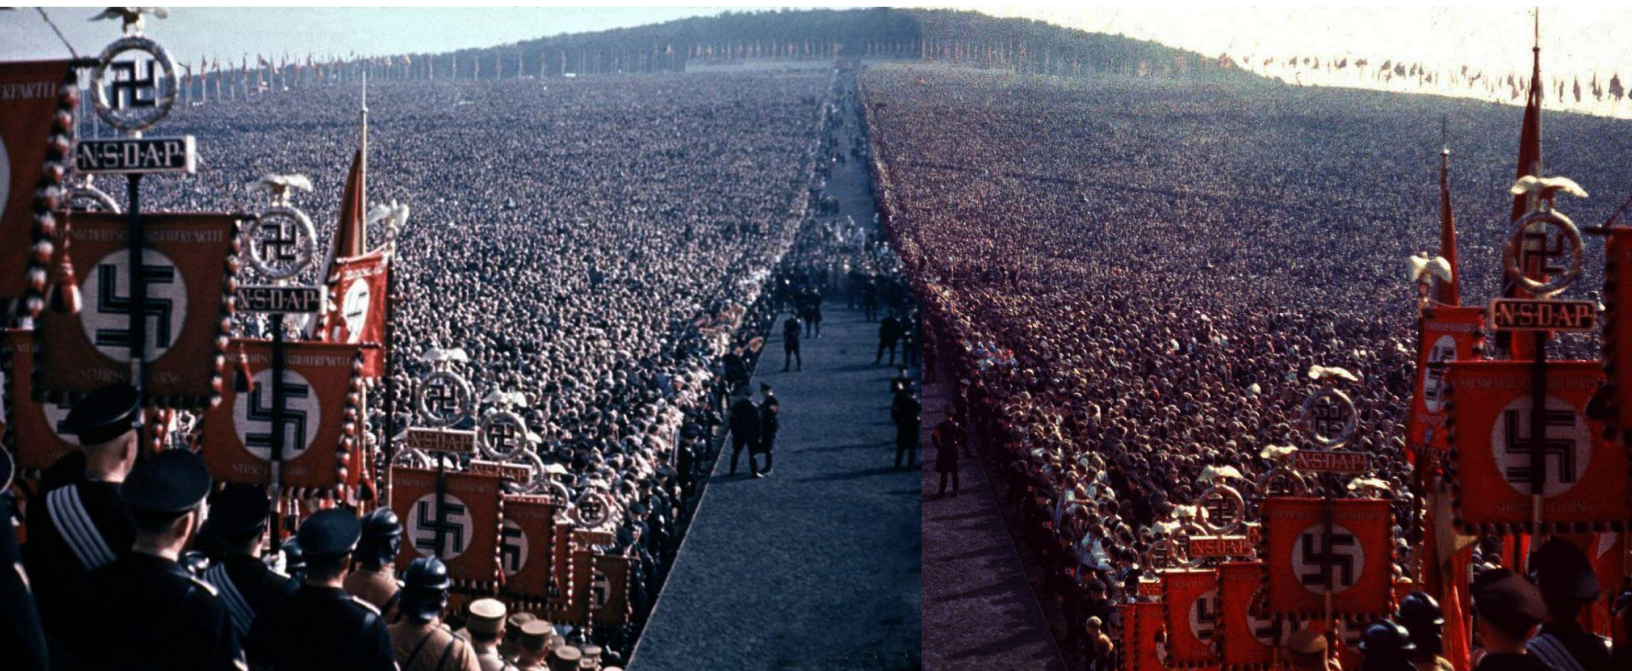

“Since true idealism is nothing but the subordination of the interests and life of the individual to the community, and this in turn is the precondition for the creation of organizational forms of all kinds, it corresponds in its innermost depths to the ultimate will of Nature. It alone leads men to voluntary recognition of the privilege of force and strength, and thus makes them a constituent particle of that order which shapes and forms the whole universe. The purest idealism is unconsciously equivalent to the deepest knowledge.”

This is the essence of the National Socialist man. And it is the very antithesis of the egregious “Nazi” stereotype hurled so vainly and with such ignorance.

In the final analysis, the Führer noted, “This planet moved through the ether for millions of years without human beings and it can do so again someday if men forget that they owe their higher existence, not to the ideas of a few crazy ideologists, but to the knowledge and ruthless application of Nature's stern and rigid laws.”

For us, a National Socialist's mission is the same as it was when Herr Hitler penned this charge: “First struggle and then we shall see what can be done.”

Fitness of THE Saxon

In the beginning of January, you were recruited for the war. Mind you we are not hoodlums looking for a fight or to show off how righteous we are by beating the innocent man. No, let me be clear, "Si vis pacem, para bellum." - attributed to Publius Flavius Vegetius.

We are not like the current political barbarian warmongers of today, sniffing the air continuously like wild dogs on hunt for any means of attack. We are also not like those bandit skinheads or various other RACIAL criminals; we are simply White men and women who value our body and health along with spirit. Because I train in MMA, or boxing or any combat sport does not mean that I train to beat a man of another race who is walking across the street from me, but on the other hand, as Oswald Mosley stated, I wish and would any good will I can, so that at the end of the day I go back to my land and he to his unharmed.

The lesson I'm trying to imprint is, that we are not training your fat hide to be a criminal gang member or some form of violent protestor, but to train your fat flabby ass as that of a stalwart KNIGHT. Defending not only your Folk but the innocent, that all may return home in peace yet should they test you they may know the wrath of not only your strength but of our proud White ancestry that backs us. Make them rue the day that they neglected your peaceful demeanor and send them to God for their reckoning.

Finally, Knight... or shall I say peasant, get in formation and prepare for a war over your loved ones and history.

Now for the days I want you to build the workout, remember if you cheat yourself, you cheat everyone who stands with you and fail all behind you.

Monday: leg day
 Tuesday: cardio with core
 Thursday: power/explosive movement
 Friday: upper body
 Saturday: light cardio
 Sunday: rest

Remember as well, and as something new:

If you are looking to get bigger and are very active you need to be eating easily 3500 calories, 1500 over the daily limit.

If you are looking to get thinner, you need to be eating 1700 calories 300 less than normal.

But there are YouTube videos that explain this, giving you a bit better grasp over your body type and your goal. More veggies and meats, light fruits with healthy fats.

If you need motivation look at fat acceptance videos, and how disgusting those...things are. YUCK!

ADOLF HITLER

Monthly Mein Kampf
Volume II, Chapter 14

[Amazing how our Führer's words are no less relevant today. The Bolshevism of the 1920s has morphed into cultural Bolshevism i.e. today's cancel culture, no less Jewish; our history rewritten to denigrate all White achievement as criminal and exploitative, our race evil; Russian hegemonism is no less dangerous, Russian government assurances of its support for White Christian civilization and White world fraternity are misleading and treacherous. The dangers posed are discretely refracted but just as perilous. As always: Hitler was right!]

Only a bourgeois simpleton could imagine that Bolshevism has been banished. With his superficial thinking, he doesn't suspect that we are dealing here with an instinctive process, that is, the striving of the Jewish people for world domination, a process that's as natural as the Anglo-Saxon impulse to dominate the Earth. And just as the Anglo-Saxon chooses his own way of reaching those ends and fights for them with his own weapons, likewise the Jew. He goes his own way—the way of sneaking in among nations and boring from within; and he fights with his own weapons—lies and slander, poison and corruption, intensifying his struggle to the point of bloodily rooting out his hated opponents. In Russian Bolshevism we see an attempt undertaken by Jewry in the 20th century to secure world domination—just as, in other epochs, they worked towards the same goal but with different, though related, means.

Their efforts are fundamentally grounded in the nature of their being. As little as any other nation would voluntarily renounce its own impulse towards expanding its nature and power, but would only do so when compelled by external circumstances or senile impotence, so little too will the Jew abandon his path toward world dictatorship by voluntary renunciation or self-suppression. He too will either be thrown back on his path by external forces, or will end his quest for world domination by dying out. But the impotence of nations, their death through senility, only comes with loss of blood purity. And this is something that the Jew has preserved better than anyone else on Earth. Therefore he advances along his destined road until he is opposed by a superior force, which, in a mighty struggle, casts the heaven-stormer back to Lucifer.

Germany is today the next great war-aim for Bolshevism. All the force of a fresh missionary idea is needed to raise up our nation once again, to rescue it from the coils of this international snake, and to stop the inner contamination of our blood. Thus the forces of our nation, once liberated, may be employed to preserve our nationality and prevent the repetition of the recent catastrophe, even in the most distant future. If this would be our goal, it would be insanity to ally ourselves with a power whose master is the mortal enemy of our future. How can we release our people from this poisonous grip if we turn ourselves over to it? How can we teach the German worker that Bolshevism is an accursed crime against humanity if we ally ourselves with this hellish monstrosity and thus recognize its legitimacy? By what right can we condemn the members of the broad masses who sympathize with a certain worldview, if our State leaders choose the representatives of that worldview as their allies?

The fight against Jewish world-Bolshevization demands a clear stance towards Soviet Russia. One cannot cast out the Devil with Beelzebub.

If folkish circles today grow enthusiastic about the idea of a Russian alliance, then let them look around Germany and become aware of who is supporting them. Or do these folkish people believe that a policy recommended and acclaimed by the international Marxist press can be beneficial to the German people? Since when has the Jew acted as shield-bearer for the militant nationalist?

There's one main reproach that could be made against the old German Reich, with regard to its alliance policy: that it spoiled its relations with everyone by leaning this way and that, and by its pathological weakness in trying to preserve world peace at any price. But it cannot be said that it failed to maintain good relations with Russia. I frankly admit that, in pre-war times, I thought it would have been better if Germany had abandoned its senseless colonial policy and its naval policy, and had allied with England against Russia—thereby replacing its weak world policy with a determined European policy of territorial acquisition on the Continent. I can't forget the constant insolent threats that Pan-Slavist Russia made against Germany.

I haven't forgotten the continual, impudent threats issued by the then pan-Slavic Russia against Germany. I haven't forgotten the constant practice military mobilizations that served only to antagonize Germany. I cannot forget the tone of Russian public opinion which, in pre-war days, excelled in hateful outbursts against our nation and Reich. Nor can I forget the big Russian press, which was always more favorable to France than us.

But despite everything, there was still a second way possible before the war. We could have relied upon Russia and turned against England.

Circumstances are different today. If, before the war, we could have thrown all sentiment to the winds and marched aside Russia, this is no longer possible today. The hand of the world-clock has moved forward since then. The hour is striking loudly, in which our peoples' destiny must be decided one way or another. The present consolidation of the great states of the world is the last warning signal for us to look to ourselves and bring our people back from their dream-world to hard reality, and to point the way to a future that alone will lead the old Reich to a new blossoming.

If, in view of this great and most important task, the National Socialist movement sets aside all illusions and takes reason as its sole guide, the catastrophe of 1918 may turn out to be an infinite blessing for the future of our nation. From that collapse, it may formulate an entirely new orientation for its foreign policy conduct. Furthermore, and internally reinforced through its new worldview, the nation may reach a final stabilization of its policy. Ultimately it will gain what England has, what even Russia had, and what France again and again utilized to base correct decisions for its own interests, namely: a political testament.

In its dealings with the outside world, the political testament of the German nation should, and must always be, the following:

Never permit two continental powers to arise in Europe! Any attempt to organize a second military power on the German border by the creation of a state capable of military strength, will be viewed as an attack against Germany. Such a situation confers not only the right but the duty to use every means, including armed force, to prevent it from happening, and to crush such a state, if it has already arisen.

See to it that our nation's strength is grounded not on colonial foundations but on the soil of our European homeland! Never consider the Reich secure unless, for centuries to come, it can give every descendant of our people his own piece of land and soil! Never forget that the most sacred right in the world is man's right to the Earth that he tills himself; and that the holiest of all sacrifices is the blood that one sheds for the Earth!

The very word Weltanschauung contains the solemn proclamation of the decision to base all actions on a specific initial resolution and thus on a manifest disposition. Such a conception can be right or wrong: it is the starting point for reaction to all phenomena and processes in life and is therefore a binding and obligatory law for every activity. The more such a conception consequently coincides with the laws of organic life, the more useful its conscious application will be for the life of a people.

KYIV, Ukraine, Jan. 1, 2022 — Thousands of Ukrainian nationalists held their annual torchlight march to mark the birthday of Stepan Bandera, leader of a rebel militia that fought alongside Nazi soldiers in World War II. The march came amid persistently high concerns over Russia's massing of troops near the Ukrainian border, which many believe could be a prelude to an invasion. A large sector of eastern Ukraine has been under the control of Russia-backed separatist rebels since 2014. "Today, when there is a war with the occupier at the front, and the struggle against the 'fifth column' continues in the rear, we remember and honor the memory of Stepan Bandera," said Andriy Tarasenko, leader of the nationalist party Right Sector.

The history of Ukraine is complicated. The present-day situation is not.

The most consequential event in Ukraine, prior to Stalin's Terror Famine of 1923-33 known as Holodomor (derived from морити голодом, moryty holodom, "to kill by starvation"), was the Baptism of the Kievan Rus'. The Rus' people were racially Nordic, i.e. Norsemen mainly originating from Sweden, settling and ruling along the river routes between the Baltic and the Black Seas from around the 8th to 11th Centuries AD. They formed a state known in modern historiography as Kievan Rus', (Kyiv being modern spelling for Kiev) which was initially a White multiethnic society where the ruling Norsemen merged and assimilated with Slavic, Baltic and Finnic tribes, ending up with Old East Slavic as their common language. The elite of Kievan Rus' was still familiar with Old Norse until their assimilation by the second half of the 11th century, but in rural areas vestiges of Norse culture lingered as long as the 14th and early 15th centuries. The name Rus' is spelled with an apostrophe standing in for a letter and vowel sound without equivalent in English. It's a transliteration of the soft sign ь, the last letter of the name Русь (Rus') in Ukrainian. The stand-in apostrophe is pronounced exactly like the "i" in "it." Something like "roos-eh." Yes, Belarus, Ruthenia and Russia all derive national names from the Norse Rus' people! Rus' is generally considered to be a borrowing from Finnic Ruotsi ("Sweden").

The Baptism of Kievan Rus' took place in several stages. In early 867, Patriarch Photius of Constantinople announced to other Christian patriarchs that the Rus', baptized by his bishop, took to Christianity with particular enthusiasm. Photius's attempts at Christianizing the country seem to have entailed no lasting consequences, since the Primary Chronicle and other Slavonic sources describe the tenth-century Rus' as firmly entrenched in paganism. Following the Primary Chronicle, the definitive Christianization of Kievan Rus' dates from the year 988 (the year is disputed), when Vladimir the Great was baptized in Chersonesus and proceeded to baptize his family and people in Kiev. The latter events are traditionally referred to as baptism of Rus' (Russian: Крещение Руси, Ukrainian: Хрещення Русі) in Ukrainian and Russian literature.

According to the Church Tradition, Christianity was brought to the territory of modern Belarus, Russia and Ukraine by Saint Andrew, the first Apostle of Jesus Christ. He traveled over the Black Sea to the Greek colony of Chersonesus Taurica in Crimea, where he converted several thousand men to the new faith. Allegedly Saint Andrew traveled also north along the Dnieper River, where Kiev would be founded around the 5th century, and as far north as the future location of Veliky Novgorod. The legendary account of the Rus'ian Primary Chronicle tells that Saint Andrew was amused by the Slavic customs of washing in hot steam bath, banya, on his way.

North Pontic Greek colonies, both in Crimea and on the modern Ukrainian shores of the Sea of Azov and the Black Sea, remained the main centers of Christianity in Eastern Europe for almost a thousand years. Notable Christian locations there include the Inkerman Cave Monastery, a medieval Byzantine monastery where the relics of St. Clement, the fourth Bishop of Rome, were supposedly kept before their removal to San Clemente by Saints Cyril and Methodius.

Saints Cyril and Methodius were the missionaries of Christianity among the Slavic peoples of Bulgaria, Great Moravia and Pannonia. Through their work, they influenced the cultural development of all Slavs, for which they received the title "Apostles to the Slavs". They are credited with devising the Glagolitic alphabet, the first alphabet used to transcribe Old Church Slavonic. Later on, their students created the Cyrillic alphabet.

In the 10th and 11th Centuries, the Kyiv princedom was the largest and most powerful state in Europe. It was the basis for the establishment of Ukraine and Russia. The rampaging Mongols destroyed the city and the power of the Rus' people in 1240. The devastation wrought by the Mongols reached far beyond battlefields and the eastern European lands they occupied. Nearly half the European population was killed by the Black Plague brought out of Asia by Mongols, by the Asian traders and opportunists that followed them. Ukrainian populations were decimated, survivors scattered.

By the middle and late 13th Century, Polish, German, Hungarian, Bulgarian and Tatar tribes sometimes singularly, sometimes united, drove the militarily over-extended, infighting Mongols out of Europe. In the aftermath, devastated and unable to resist, Ukraine lost large swathes of land to Poland, Lithuania, and eventually Russia.

Late in the 17th Century, the vast steppe of western Ukraine, similar to America's Great Plains, became the breadbasket of Europe. Eastern Ukraine sits on sizable reserves of coal, oil and natural gas. Entering the 18th Century, imperial Russia depended on the Ukraine for grain, vegetables, sugar beets, sunflower seeds, dairy products and beef. The 19th Century advent of industrialization, however minimal in Russia, deemed Ukrainian petroleum and coal assets indispensable. Among Russians, Ukraine was affectionally known as "Little Russia," in the sense of Russia's kid brother. The fiercely independent and ethnically divergent Ukrainians were not amused. When the imperial domination of Russian border states was broken by the Bolshevik revolution, Ukrainians thought that, as an independent member of the Soviet Union, the assertion of national identity and self-determination even if tied to a Russian economy would be a realistic expectation. Lenin had promised as much. During the 1920s under the Ukrainization policy pursued by the Ukrainian national Communist government, Russian Soviet leadership encouraged a national renaissance in the Ukrainian culture and language. Until Stalin.

One of Austrian Alexander Wienerberger's famous undercover photos: starving mother and children in Karkhiv, 1933

In the 1930s, after Lenin's death, Stalin took supreme command of the Soviet Union. Ukrainians resisted forced collectivization of farms and factories, the Ukrainian industrial East the only viable manufacturing center in the entire Soviet empire. Stalin's Jew commissars murdered farm owners, landlords, factory owners, officials of every government agency, even idealistic Communists who had believed in the revolution and Lenin's assurances. The Ukrainians were starved into submission in a conquest worse than any barbaric Mongol invasion. Incalculable millions died in Stalin's forced terror famine, the Holodomor.

When Adolf Hitler launched his preventive war against Russia in June 1941, two weeks before Stalin's intended invasion of Europe, the Reich Minister for the Occupied Eastern Territories, Alfred Rosenberg, begged Hitler repeatedly to treat and take care of Ukrainians as allies against the Bolshevik monsters. Rosenberg, also chief ideologue of the National-Socialist Party, was born in Estonia in 1893, then a part of the Russian Empire. He studied architecture at the Riga Polytechnical Institute and engineering at Moscow's Imperial Higher Technical School, completing his PhD studies in 1917. Rosenberg spoke Russian and some Ukrainian. A racial historian, he was fully aware of the Ukrainian people's Nordic origins.

Hitler acknowledged the value of Ukraine as a fighting ally, beyond its strategic value as supplier of foodstuffs and petroleum, but had no time for the finer details. Wehrmacht soldiers and Waffen-SS units did their best to form practical relationships with Ukrainians. The 14th Waffen Grenadier Division ("Galicia") was formed to organize the thousands of volunteers who wanted to fight along with Ukrainian nationalist militias that they might finally rid themselves of Russian dominion.

Otto von Wechter and Hans Frank review Ukrainian SS volunteers in June 1943

With Rosenberg, Hitler argued that He had to gain the high ground over Communist Russia before winter, or the struggle would land in the balance with an unpredictable outcome. Alas, German soldiers were stopped in their lightning advance to Moscow by Russia's greatest defense: winter. Additionally, German generals re-interpreted Hitler's battle plans and missed entering Moscow by less than 7 miles. Next year came the stalemate at Stalingrad, which would have been won for Germany had Hitler not come down with dysentery at the front in August 1942, and His generals again revising the attack plans. Beware your subordinates!

After Stalin's Asiatic soldateska had driven the Germans back and out of Ukraine, every Ukrainian nationalist or collaborator, real or imagined, was killed or deported to Russia for slave labor.

The Soviet Empire collapsed under its own weight in 1991. Ukrainians celebrated as they thought, once again, that Russian domination of their homeland was at an end. But economic dependencies kept Russia in control, if only through puppet governments. In 2014, Ukrainians chased the last Russian front man out of the presidency during the Euromaidan unrest to keep Ukraine oriented to the West, to Europe, rather than the Eurasian East, where Russia has turned in another iteration of its on-again-off-again anti-West foreign policy. Russia came in during the chaos, its soldiers in unmarked uniforms, and reclaimed Crimea along with the eastern industrial provinces of the Donbas region. The Donbas oblast is 45% ethnic Russian, but many Ukrainians there desire the supposed economic security of its border neighbor Russia. The Donbas separatist war has been ongoing since 2014.

Russia very obviously wields great power in the Donbas. A lot of official propaganda but little in the way of genuine information escapes the statelets, and foreign organizations are mostly forbidden to work in them. The little we do know comes mainly from firsthand accounts (including my own direct contact with a Comrade there), social media and a handful of humanitarian reports. According to separatist official websites, their government leaders are Ukrainian. But according to defectors and released prisoners, Russia's hand is everywhere plain to see.

The ruble has replaced the Ukrainian hryvnia. Residents are made to apply for Russian passports and relinquish their Ukrainian ones. They vote in Russian elections, though it appears that most of the three to four million people (a very rough estimate) who live in the territories are not afforded full Russian citizenship. The vast and oppressive security apparatus is managed by Russian and Ukrainian agents. The teaching of the Ukrainian language is forbidden, as is the celebration of Ukrainian holidays. Defectors describe increasingly wretched circumstances — a scarcity of work and goods, failing social services — but also a persistent hope among devoted Russophiles that Putin will eventually incorporate them and life will improve.

Vladimir Putin presents himself to his citizens and to the world as the standard-bearer of a modern counter-enlightenment. He has declared liberal democracy “obsolete,” a political arrangement that has “outlived its purpose.” One of his historical role models is said to be Alexander III, a reactionary tsar in the Romanov dynasty who instituted draconian restrictions on the press, sought to “Russify” his multi-ethnic empire, and mobilized against internal and external threats. Four years ago, Putin expressed his deep admiration for the tsar while visiting the Crimean Peninsula, a substantial and distinctly unthreatening parcel of Ukraine that Russia invaded in 2014 and has occupied ever since. Now he threatens another fratricidal conflict despite his many writings from earlier this Century lauding White racial fraternity, supporting White Christian civilization.

Several years ago a major American nationalist magazine published a fawning encomium to Putin entitled “Russia's Deliverer.” To quote the blurb for a related book:

Fifteen years ago the author [Matthew Raphael Johnson] was talking about an emerging star in Russia by the name of Vladimir Putin. Few if any had even heard of him. Our critics said, “This man is no hero. He's a dyed-in-the-wool Communist. An aggressor. A schemer. A flash in the pan.” How wrong they were and how prescient Dr. Johnson truly was. Turns out Vladimir Putin is a true nationalist and perhaps the only man who can stop the NWO in its tracks.

“Dr.” Johnson is an ex-member of chubby Matthew Heimbach's ludicrous defunct Traditionalist Worker Party and an excommunicated ex-priest of the Russian Orthodox Church. An orientalist of weird genesis, Johnson, like his “nationalist” hero Putin, has rejected the West for a Eurasian ideal, whatever that is, including conversion to Russian Orthodoxy. An engagement announcement in a local newspaper describing the forthcoming nuptial of Johnson and a woman named Jennifer has become a worldwide internet viral embarrassment.

According to The New York Post for Dec. 11, 2021:

Bizarre wedding announcement goes viral, reveals man's dark past

An engagement notice for a couple has gone viral, revealing a relationship forged in fire — and a man with a dark past. The bizarre announcement was shared to Twitter after the user's parents noticed it in their local newspaper. It begins plainly enough, announcing the forthcoming nuptials of the perfectly ordinary-sounding Dr. Matthew Johnson and Ms. Jennifer Bair Cullen, revealing they are due to be wed next February. It briefly lists the happy couple's hometowns and parents, before taking its first turn for the weird.

"Colton Cullen, the son of the bride, is delighted to share in this miracle of love and devotion he's witnessing for the first time in his life," it reads. "He would like to thank his stepfather for the genuine loyalty, honesty and protection that neither he nor his mother have ever known before."

But there is barely time to digest that before we plunge deeper. "As a diamond is produced only under intense heat and pressure," it continues, "Jennifer's beauty derives from enduring decades of narcissistic attempts to defeat her virtue and crush her spirit." Next, Dr. Johnson inserts a humble brag. "Matthew is ecstatic to be the only man adequately equipped to satiate Jennifer's long-unsatisfied yearning for romantic attention, affection and love."

As for the man himself, the notice tells us that: "As gold is refined only through intense heat and flame, Matthew's strength of will derives from enduring decades of pathological contempt, deceit and hypocrisy."

"They failed to break him."

To close in truly creepy fashion we then learn that Jennifer is "overjoyed to finally provide him with the unconditional love, undying respect and gratifying intimacy like no man has ever experienced".

It ends with: "To put it simply: They won".

Just a brief exploration of this Johnson's other "nationalist" efforts reveals a sinister and Aleister Crowley-like belief in his superiority, a total self-aggrandizement. Like so many right-wing "intellectuals," he is absorbed by and entirely within his own self. He is his own macabre obsession.

I initially bought into Putin's White nationalist intimations, but realized that he, like so many populist leaders taking advantage of genuine White anxieties, is in it for himself. Many European nationalists believe that a Russian led Eurasian alliance is preferable to the old Western NATO/American occupation of their continent, along with the collateral degenerate American pop culture now encrusted over a once glorious European heritage. Putin has abandoned a Western accommodation and now courts China despite a long history of Sino-Russian distrust dating back long before the ascendance of Mao --with Stalin's assistance, a short-lived arrangement. Mao and Stalin, the Russians and the Chinese, never trusted each other. No different today, staged media smiles and handshakes to the contrary.

An active, respected National-Socialist in Germany raised the alarm 3-4 years ago, warning Germans of the Right who believed Putin was a White nationalist that he was no friend of "White Christian civilization." He exposed Putin as a tool of Jewish interests, funded by Jewish oligarchs who built a 1.3 billion dollar luxury estate for him on the Black Sea. Putin's interest in the Ukraine is less about geo-political concerns revolving around security against the western NATO alliance, it is more about getting hold of Ukrainian petroleum assets. Several natural gas pipelines run from the Ukrainian east to Europe for home heating and industry. Putin has tried to put the Ukrainian gas firms out of business by running pipelines from Russian gas reserves through the North Sea to Germany and the rest of Europe, the notorious Nord Stream projects. Oil and gas enterprises in Russia are owned, almost exclusively, by Jews who pay Putin to fulfill their agenda, not Russia's as such. Putin lies to hide his Jews. He is not out just to secure Russia from western threats, slowly surrounded by more countries -once in the Soviet empire- applying for and granted membership in NATO. "The savior of Germany does not live in Russia." Our German NS Comrade is right.

In the January 27 issue of The Wall Street Journal, respected Catholic conservative political analyst George Weigel unmasks Putin's dallying war threat and his generic assertions of security.

While Vladimir Putin is determined to reconstitute the old Soviet Union as a sphere of unchallenged Russian influence, Russian imperialism has a history that long antedates Mr. Putin. Czarist Russia was an expansive imperial power, extending its hegemony over the Eurasian landmass to the Pacific Ocean. Lenin, Stalin and their epigones, despite their ideological rejection of czarism, acted as de facto Great Russian imperialists in assembling the Soviet Union and maintaining it by brute force. In lamenting the demise of that prison house of nations as the greatest geopolitical disaster of the 20th century, Mr. Putin was in part mourning the failure of the imperial project begun by Peter the Great. Yet Russian imperialism has even deeper cultural roots that influence Mr. Putin's assault on Ukrainian sovereignty today.

The crucial moment in the lengthy process of the Christianization of the eastern Slavic peoples was the Baptism of Rus' in 988. Then, the baptized Kyivan Prince Vladimir returned to his capital after a military victory in Crimea and urged his people to follow his example by being baptized en masse in the Dnieper River. They did, and others in the region followed. More than a millennium later, the meaning of the Baptism of Rus' for Christianity in that part of the world remains sharply contested—and relevant to contemporary geopolitics.

The Russian Orthodox Church's insistence on being the sole heir of the Baptism of Rus' is an integral part of the longstanding Russian claim, now deployed by Mr. Putin, that Ukraine is not a real nation with its own culture and history. At best, Ukraine is a "little brother" to the Russian hegemon. Yet the various Ukrainian Orthodox Churches and the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church have claims to the heritage of 988 at least as strong as the Russians'. The Baptism of Rus', after all, took place in Kyiv and its environs when Moscow was a thick forest inhabited by wolves and bears.

While the ethnographic, cultural and ecclesiastical history that unfolded between 988 and today is complex, one modern incident illustrates the nexus of Russian imperialism, Soviet power, the Russian Church's proprietary claim to the Baptism of Rus' and Mr. Putin's Ukraine policy.

During Hitler's onslaught on the Soviet Union, Stalin cynically decided that Russian Orthodoxy, whose clergy he had killed in the tens of thousands, could be a useful tool in the “Great Patriotic War” against his erstwhile German allies. Stalin restored the Orthodox patriarchate of Moscow, and the Russian church gave legitimacy to the Soviet regime by blessing sacrifices of life, liberty and treasure on behalf of the Motherland. The imperial instinct remained, however, as did the state-controlled Russian church’s determination to own and control the heritage of 988.

Thus in 1946, Russian Orthodoxy’s leadership, working with the Soviet secret police, the NKVD, engineered a contrived Sobor, or church council, to liquidate the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church, which had become a safe-deposit box of Ukrainian cultural identity and national aspiration.

The previous year, the Ukrainian church’s leadership had been arrested. Those who weren’t murdered were condemned to Gulag camps. The coerced “council,” virtually at gunpoint, acquiesced to an ecclesiastical variation on classic imperialism, as the Russian Orthodox Church absorbed the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church, which ceased to exist legally. That dissidents among the Ukrainian clergy and faithful, without parish churches or other institutions, maintained the world’s largest underground religious community for the next 45 years was little less than miraculous.

As I wrote above, this history of Ukraine is complicated. But contemporary events are easily explained. Putin is not the great White hope who can defeat the New World Order. He is ready to kill White people, brutally. The New Yorker for Jan. 23 reports:

Once more, Putin is poised to invade Ukraine. His weapons include military hardware, malware, and propaganda. The last time he invaded, he did so with utmost stealth, employing the “little green men” of the special forces as temporary cover in the court of public opinion while seizing Simferopol, Yalta, and Sevastopol. Now he wants the West, distracted and in disarray, to know that Donetsk, Kharkiv, and Luhansk, in the industrial east, and even Kyiv, the capital, are potentially in his sights.

For weeks, Putin’s deputies and propaganda outlets have delivered contradictory pronouncements, at once denying any intention to invade and amplifying his urge to roll back what he sees as the galling encroachments of the West since the end of the Cold War. “NATO Is a Cancer: Shall We Cure It?” was the headline last week in one pro-Kremlin newspaper, Argumenti i Fakty. In Literaturnaya Gazeta, Konstantin Sivkov, a military analyst, said, “Russia must take unconventional steps. Harsh ones. If we don’t, our ‘partners’ might think they can wipe their feet on Russia.” He wondered about the possible need to create warheads that could “strike Yellowstone Park” or set off a “deadly tsunami with waves hundreds of metres high that would sweep away everything in their path.”

Few leaders have leveraged inscrutability the way Putin has. His propagandists, kleptocratic allies, and secret services never know precisely what he will do next. But his general imperative is obvious: the preservation of power. As a trained K.G.B. officer, Putin senses threats in countless corners, and he is schooled in the history of challenges to Kremlin authority.

The Yellowstone bomb threat derives from the fact that the mantle in parts of the Park is relatively thin, sitting above massive magma chambers. The geological history of Yellowstone National Park worries many observers about a super volcanic eruption that potentially could destroy much of the United States. The Earth’s crust beneath Yellowstone National Park is still restless. A hydrogen bomb dropped in a Yellowstone basin could theoretically release a catastrophic volcanic eruption. Russia is ready to deliver massive tsunamis to the world? What Nazi ever spun tales foretelling of possible attacks against a country still predominantly White?

Eight years ago I met a young man from Ukraine. He had come to America for additional schooling in electrical engineering. His parents borrowed money to get him out of Ukraine during the 2014 Russian invasion of Crimea and the start of the Donbas civil war. One of the top ten American engineering schools is located in my city. Alexander needed some extra income to get by beyond ramen noodle lunches. I hired him as a seasonal assistant in my company's IT department. It took only a few days for us to become fast friends. Our non-work discussions revealed us to be devoted National-Socialists, fluent in its history, both imbued with the teaching of Adolf Hitler. A remarkable talent, he also spoke—in addition to his native Ukrainian—Russian, as most Ukrainians do, German, as surprisingly many Ukrainians also do, and English, also a popular second or third language in Ukraine. After passing exams to gain recognition as a Certified Energy Manager, he went back home to defend his country.

He lives in the industrial city of Mariupol, Donetsk Oblast, 20 miles from the Russian front lines. When he can email through a secure server (everything in Ukraine is hacked by Russian security: every computer, phone, smart TV, onboard car computer, TV cable and satellite box, home and business security system, ---everything with semi-conductors or microchips) I get news of what is actually going on. It is common knowledge in Ukraine that Russian Jewish oligarchs resent the fact that a petroleum rich region just beyond the Russian government's reach is taking away from profits that would accrue out of the energy monopoly in Europe currently near completion, funded by Russian Jewish energy conglomerates. The subjugation of Europe will come from Russia through Jewish owned pipelines.

Members of the Azov Battalion and its political arm National Corps

Alexander is now 30 years old. He joined a nationalist militia some years back. The independent militias have been authorized by the Ukrainian government to assist and enhance defense alongside army regulars. The Azov Battalion is one of the most famous, based on the old Galician SS regiment, a Waffen-SS rune and the wheel of the black sun upon its banners. The Azov dodge mortar shells and some heavier ordinances lobbed over the front lines into Ukrainian farmsteads from separatists in neighboring Donbas. Alexander says the shelling never ends. It is all the more frightening because it is unpredictable. Nearly 13,000 Ukrainian soldiers and militiamen have been killed, many tens of thousands injured over the past eight years.

Emblem of the Azov Battalion

Coincidentally, a report in the New York Times Magazine, Jan. 23, mirrors the example of my Comrade Alexander, and so many thousands of other Ukrainian nationalists.

Pisky is as wronged a place as you will find in Ukraine. The village is on the front line that separates forces of the Ukrainian military from those of a secessionist statelet that calls itself the Donetsk People's Republic. Backed by Russia, the D.P.R. has been at war with Ukraine for nearly eight years. Its fighters fire on the Ukrainian troops. The Ukrainians fire back. Or vice versa. No ground is taken, none ceded. The combatants rarely set eyes on one another. Rockets miss their targets and land in Pisky instead, the explosions echoing through the frames of the already-shattered homes and what was once the nave of the church. The priest fled years ago. So did most of the villagers.

Some rockets do find their targets. On a morning in early August, Volodymyr Veryovka and Yaroslav Semenyaka, soldiers in a Ukrainian Army company stationed at Pisky, were ordered to drive a freight truck down Lenin Road, which runs through Pisky and along the front, to a bridge in the village. The D.P.R. forces had been shelling every day through the summer, and the truck bucked in and out of fresh craters. The stretch Volodymyr and Yaroslav rode along now didn't have the full cover of the tree line, and they knew they might be exposed to enemy batteries. There wasn't much they could do about this. Loaded onto the truck's bed was a crane, and Yaroslav could push the engine only so hard. So they talked.

They had met for the first time that day. Volodymyr was a railway engineer until he joined up at age 34, because, as he said, "It had to be done." Ukraine needed all the fighters it could get no matter their age. He had even been commissioned an officer, though this was his first deployment. He had been in uniform only a few months.

Yaroslav, three years younger, was the veteran. He rushed to the front as soon as the shooting started, in April 2014, when the D.P.R. and a lesser twin in sedition, the neighboring Luhansk People's Republic, broke off from Ukraine. The secessionist war had quickly consumed far eastern Ukraine, the region colloquially known as Donbas, and then spread west. Ukrainians like Yaroslav were unsure whether their young nation, independent at that point for barely two decades, would survive.

His father, who did dispiriting service in the Soviet Ground Forces in East Germany during the Cold War, tried to talk him out of it. But Yaroslav, swollen with the same patriotism Volodymyr now felt, asked him, "If not me, who?" He was one of thousands of Ukrainians, young and old, men and women, who rushed to defend their country then. He had been on the front since, fighting in some of the war's pivotal battles. Roughly 13,000 Ukrainian soldiers and civilians had died.

But now the war was stalemated. The front line had barely shifted in years. Ukraine wasn't relenting, but neither was it willing to go on the offensive to retake the seized territory. The enemy likewise refused to retreat. Yet it was clear to Yaroslav, and to anyone else paying attention, that Russia no longer had much use for the D.P.R. or L.P.R. It hadn't fully annexed them, as it had Ukraine's Crimean Peninsula, instead leaving the statelets in a kind of limbo of national identity: part Russian, part Ukrainian, generally miserable.

In Russia, Putin justifies his incursions into Ukraine as defensive. He and his Jewish stealth-controlled government accuse Ukrainians of being fascist and Nazi sympathizers, ready to kill Russians. Incessant propaganda in all Russian media resurrects images of Ukrainians in Nazi uniforms back in the 1940s, Ukrainian Nazi SS men, modern fascist organizations such as the nationalist militias. Partially true. About 25% of Ukrainians poll as sympathetic to Nazism. And 25% of all militiamen are quite openly Nazi. My one-time colleague among them. Exploited for all their history, is it any wonder the Ukrainians seek relief in the one hope they experienced as a people when our Führer had the courage to move against the Russian Bolshevik terror 80 years ago?

The Ukrainian militias are actually fighting for their freedom, for their culture. They have nothing in common with the puerile American adventurers who feign worship of a re-imagined Christ and the man who supplants him, Donald Trump, a corrupt fraud categorically owned by Jewish financiers. The Ukrainian militiamen are fighters, not schemers who imagine themselves to be revolutionary patriots, amassing personal armories, affecting military bearing, digging escape tunnels and bunkers in their backyards. When I was 8, my buds and I built "forts" too.

More than half the Ukrainian population is ready to defend their country. Men, women, old, young, middle-aged. There is no outright hostility toward Russians, just Russian hegemony influenced by Jewish financial manipulation. All White nations have been conditioned to serve parasitic capitalist conservatives and liberal Marxists. The common leech in both cases is the Jew. The Liberals and the Conservatives have something else in common: steering people away from National-Socialism, portraying the fight against some nebulous "fascism" as fighting for liberty and patriotism. Fighting other White people. Killing other White people. Who benefits? What are the real aims? Security? Geography? Clearing borderlands to act as buffers against invasion? Or is it all for economics, for money, for profit, for wealth, for the benefit of that element of social corrosion inciting wars between White nations since the 18th Century?

"A war between Europeans is a civil war," said Victor Hugo. FRATRICIDE.

Russia is a powerful nation with a dynamic and magnificent culture. Ukrainians would be happy to negotiate trade deals, open borders for employment and commerce. Why must Putin launch a war against a people so intimately aligned with Russia, by will or woe?

Let me close with news given me by my contact in Ukraine through auspices of his militia and the Ukrainian government: 447 pdf pages of documentation developed by the governments of the Netherlands, Germany, Ukraine, and Malaysia. Malaysian Airlines Flight 17 from Amsterdam to Kuala Lumpur, as you might recall, was shot down over Ukraine on July 17, 2014, not long after the Russian separatist hostilities had begun. 283 passengers and 15 crew were killed. 68% of the passengers were Dutch on their way to business or tourism in the former Dutch colony. 80 passengers were under the age of 18. The Russian surface-to-air missile was driven over the border from Russia into Donetsk that morning, a Buk 9M83. I myself had heard about some of the particulars in this report a few years ago. The most horrifying detail is one that many people are sure could not happen. A sudden decompression of an airliner cabin at 39,000 feet would surely render everyone quickly unconscious. Passengers were dead before they hit the ground. Wrong. Civilians and soldiers on the Ukrainian side of the border, where the bodies and wreckage landed, heard people screaming once they were within a couple hundred feet of the ground. Including crying infants. An utterly horrifying sight to experience, as if the Ukrainian people needed a reminder of what they were up against. Yes, war unleashes the worst in human behavior, fatal miscalculations. But what can ever justify murder of Whites by Whites in a world weary of wars, a White race nearly killed off by two worldwide conflagrations. Again, I ask, who benefits?

Whether it is Putin or Trump, Orban or any other “White nationalist deliverer,” these men are collaborators in the Jewish manipulation of wealth and thus all world economies. The same Jews who decry these men as fascists also support them. Whichever way the wind blows, left or right, the one constituency that always wins is the one furtively hovering in the background.

On January 13, The New York Times published an amazing article. Sometimes the backstage manipulations are too obvious, even the Times cannot pretend to deny them. Read for yourself:

C.E.O.s Were Our Heroes, at Least According to Them

Marc Benioff seemed to be having an amazing pandemic. The lockdowns were adding to his wealth — estimated at more than $10 billion — as his company, Salesforce, tallied record sales of software that allowed people to work from anywhere. The experience was nourishing his soul, delivering a poignant reminder that humanity was really one enormous family, united by its common vulnerability to a virus. And the ordeal was affirming a faith that Mr. Benioff had been preaching for decades: that business leaders were the ultimate guardians of human progress.

“In the pandemic, it was C.E.O.s in many, many cases all over the world who were the heroes,” Mr. Benioff said. “They’re the ones who stepped forward with their financial resources, their corporate resources, their employees, their factories, and pivoted rapidly — not for profit, but to save the world.”

Mr. Benioff issued that declaration a year ago, the last time the World Economic Forum convened — not in its usual venue, the village of Davos in the Swiss Alps, but virtually, over a clunky videoconferencing platform. He was speaking during a panel discussion dedicated to “stakeholder capitalism,” the idea that businesses were no longer ruled solely by the imperative to enrich shareholders, but were answerable to a broader array of interests — employees, the environment, local communities.

The word “stakeholder” is a talisman at Davos among the billionaires who flock to the Forum. Throwing “stakeholder” into a sentence is a demonstration that they “care” about loftier matters than private jets, oceanfront mansions and the other paraphernalia of wealth. They “empathize” with their workers and their workers’ children. They worry about the vitality of the communities down there, in the shade of their skyscraper headquarters. They prefer that polar bears not succumb to heatstroke, and that homeless people be housed somewhere — a particular concern for Mr. Benioff.

He was pointing to the pandemic as proof that companies like his were genuinely dedicated to the cause, and not just indulging high-minded argot as a prophylactic against the redistribution of their wealth. He and his fellow corporate leaders had banded together to secure protective gear like masks and gowns for hospitals. Pharmaceutical companies had developed Covid vaccines in record time. Bankers had unleashed credit, preventing bankruptcies.

“C.E.O.s stepped up,” Mr. Benioff said, later adding: “We would not be where we are in the world today without the outstanding leadership of many, many C.E.O.s who did heroic work all over the world to basically save their communities.”

There was some truth to his depiction. Mr. Benioff had located protective gear and delivered it to American hospitals by working his connections in China and then coordinating with fellow executives. It was fair to assume that his initiative had saved lives. But it was also fair to ask a pertinent question: Why was the wealthiest, most powerful country on earth dependent on the charity of a profit-making software company to outfit medical personnel with basic protection in the face of a pandemic?

Individuals like Mr. Benioff had benefited from public goods financed by taxpayers — the schools that educated their employees; the internet; roads, bridges and other infrastructure enabling commerce. Then they deployed lobbyists, accountants and lawyers to master legal forms of tax evasion that starved the system of resources. He and his fellow billionaires could crow about giving back in part because of how comprehensively they had taken.

Mr. Benioff is an archetype of a species that has come to be known as Davos Man — people whose wealth and power are so vast that they are able to write the rules for the rest of us. The term is derived from the ultimate gathering place for billionaires, the World Economic Forum.

This year, Davos Man has been forced to ground his jets as the pandemic has again scotched plans for an in-person gathering. Instead, a series of virtual conversations billed as State of the World sessions are being held.

“State of the world” is another classic phrase from the Davos vernacular, one that invokes a single domain of universal experiences, while shrouding the reality that the billionaires occupy a realm of their own.

Marc Benioff. Qui bono?

WHO BENEFITS?

Steve Bannon and several other members of Trump's transition team, before the inauguration, were hobnobbing with Russians in an attempt to establish better relations even before Trump took office. All this was based on the idea that post-Communist Russia had still been given a bad rap in world politics and that the only way to unite the White cultures of Europe and the US was to bridge the gap to Russia, to support a nationalist federation that spanned the northern hemisphere. Putin indicated more than once that this was something he would explore, as he himself supported economic and cultural co-operation among White nations.

But Putin wanted more than that. He also wanted the old imperial and Soviet buffer states back as additional border protection. That geopolitical goal has remained a Russian foreign policy fundamental for more than 250 years. Bannon's "economic nationalism" or "civic nationalism" would drop the bad racist connotation but still regulate immigration. The compassionate face of nationalism, as it were. After the Trump triumph, outstaying his welcome in Trump's no-loyalties White House, Bannon was back on his own, touring Europe to advise nationalist parties on how to win. After all, he just proved himself to be a master political campaign genius, getting an unethical fraud like Trump elected to the most powerful office in the world. Eventually, the shaggy ideas man was exposed as nothing but a schemer taking advantage of the ebb and flow of public political passions, and guessing right in American democratic roulette.

Putin supported Marine Le Pen in her 2017 French presidential campaign, but only to rankle the establishment parties. She had no chance of winning after diluting her father Jean Le Pen's genuinely fascist National Front into a conservative capitalist club where all were welcome, if you behaved in the French manner. Eric Zemmour, the Jewish rightist TV pundit, was gaining ground since last year based on his unabashed anti-immigrant rants until he grew boring and suspicious, the French nationalist voter realizing that Zemmour might just possibly be a decoy.

Notice that the politically savvy Bannon does not associate with the heirs to his economic, civic, non-racist nationalism. Unlike Hungarian Jew dirty trickster Roger Stone or certain mentally whacked members of Congress who flirt with them, the Proud Boys and Oath Keepers and the entire lot of reckless patriot militias stand and fall, lately mostly fall, on their own, no help from the Bannon Brain behind all the recent rightist MAGA political success. Economic and civic nationalist or just generic patriot it has to be, because White it sure as hell isn't.

Tusitala "Tiny" Toese, a Samoan leader of the Portland Proud Boys, shown in photo below with his Asian mixed-race Number Two man; deposed ex police informer and onetime grand poohbah of the Proud Boys after anti-masturbation founder Gavin McInnes withdrew, Henry "Enrique" Tarrio, proudly Afro-Cuban he says; and a whole chicken coop full of bizarro characters populate these "patriot Christian militias." They're as creepy as Bannon, so why does he disown them?

Look, ma! No cavities! Tarrio in D.C.

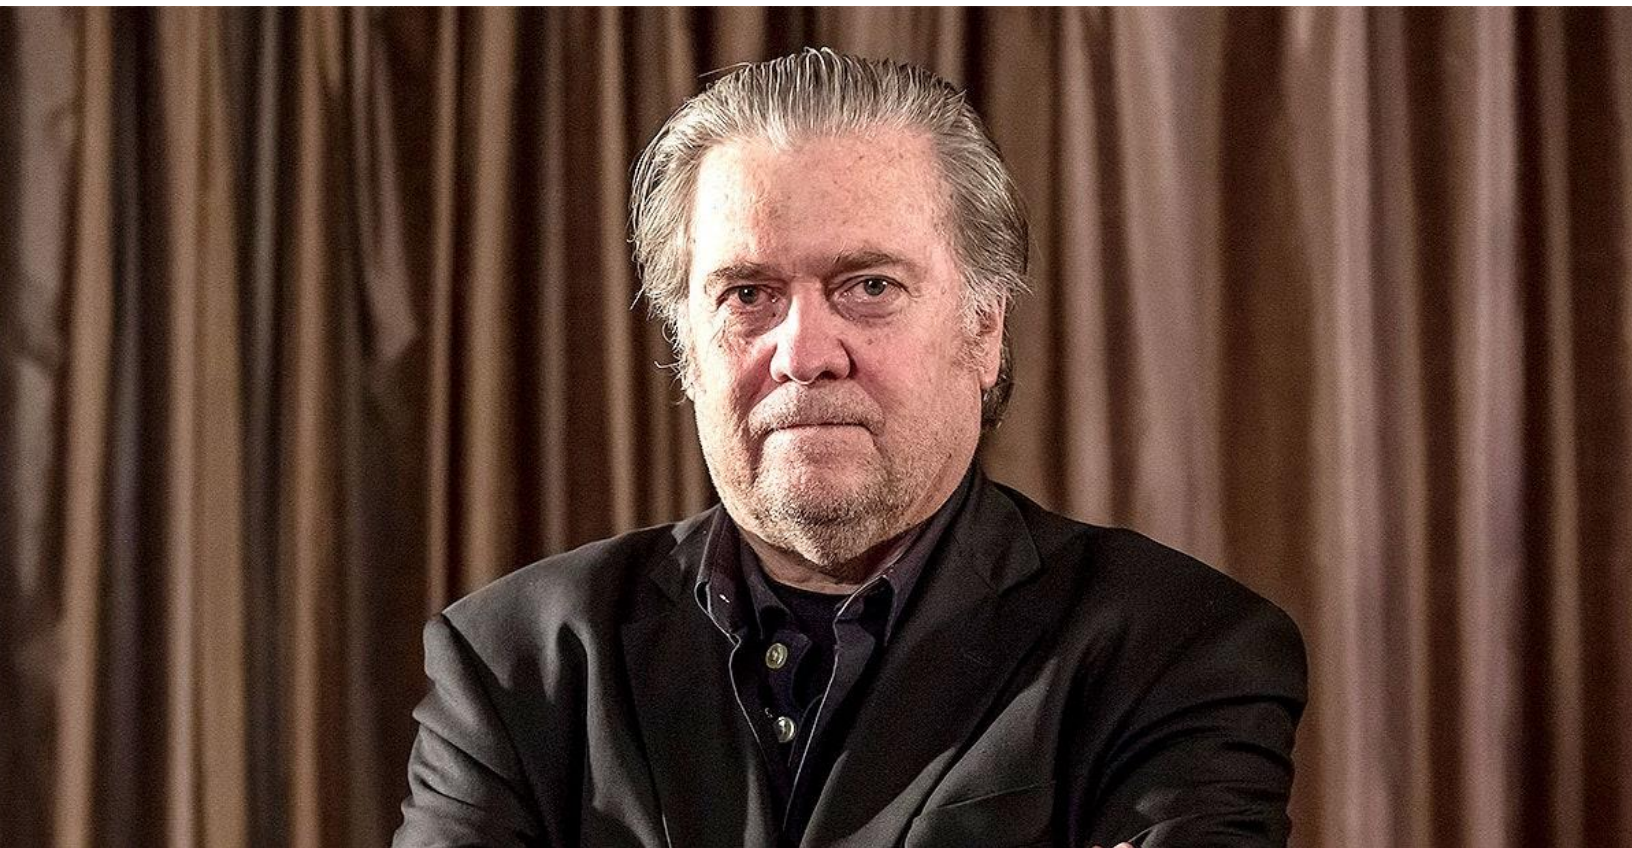

Tiny Toese in his summertime patriot romper suit.

American Christian patriot revolutionaries? Just who benefits from the presence of these clownish disruptors? What are their qualifications, other than bloated ego? Exactly what are they loyal to? America? Western civilization? Their FBI interrogators? In the end, who benefits?

Name the race, if you can.

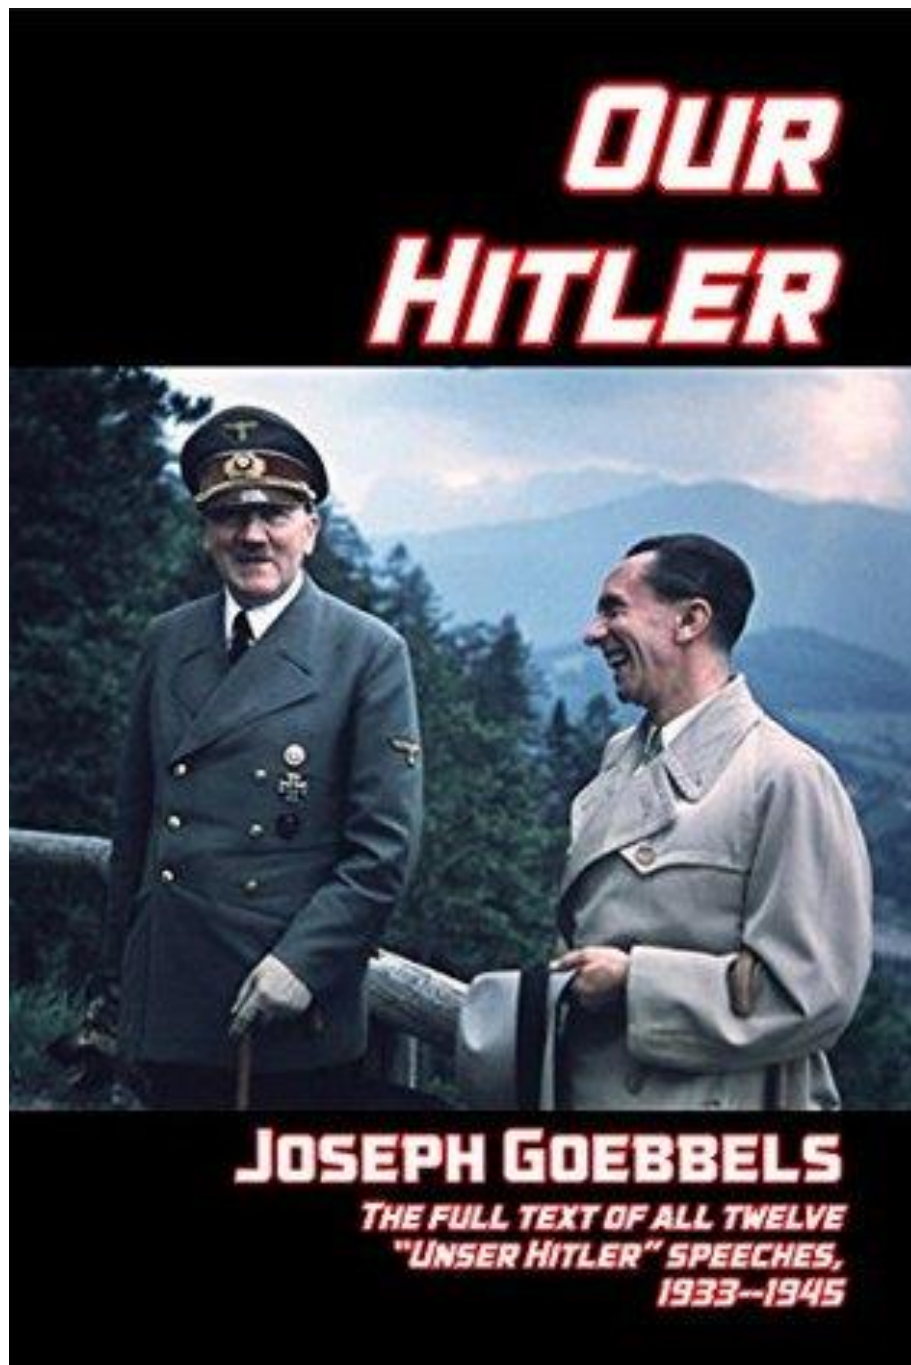

Steve Bannon in China. This unethical slob was taken to be a White nationalist champion.

The politics of division. Who benefits? The unconditional worship of Donald Trump. Who benefits? Vladimir Putin declared Deliverer of White Christian civilization. Who benefits? The antics of American toy soldier patriot militias. Who benefits? A retarded negro drug addict and neighborhood nuisance in Minneapolis raised to world sainthood. Who benefits? Pandemic panics and lockdowns. Who benefits?

War in the Ukraine. WHO BENEFITS? Not White people forced to watch a brother war, another one, live and in color on every TV screen in the world.

As a National-Socialist I turn my back to any White man or woman who can justify murder of other Whites as a political remedy to real or imagined resentments. I wish harm on no one in Ukraine, or Russia, or Europe, or America. My devotion to White culture is real. It is not tied to hopes pinned on some Wall Street trickster who postures as a friend of the working man, or a tsarist wannabe who is wealthier than any Davos Man and just as much owned by filthy Jewish money.

The savior of the White race is a man known to everybody on Earth, White and non-White...

Racial Slurry -- As reported in the Spokane Inlander, Jan. 27, the wife of a Washington state prosecutor was busted -- again -- for using racial slurs on social media. Lesley Anne Haskell, the wife of Spokane County prosecutor Larry Haskell, typed out "nigger" and repeatedly referred to herself as a "proud White nationalist" on the right-wing Gab platform. "My husband is the Spo Co Prosecutor and he's the last line of conservative armor that the County has," Haskell posted. "Spokane has gone to sh*t." Haskell reacted to a New York Post story, "MSNBC's Joy Reid: Conservatives would trade tax cuts to 'openly say the N-word,' by declaring the TV host was 'the true definition of the word nigger.'" Haskell frequently interacts with prominent white nationalist accounts and expresses similar views. "Our race is dying, we need to make more White babies!" Haskell wrote in another post. Right ideas Lesley, but a little tact please.

Even her profile name, Beauseant_Deux_Vult, appears to be reference to the crusader war cry "Deus Vult," which is Latin for "God wills it," and "Beauseant" was the banner of the Knights Templar that has been invoked by Norwegian mass shooter Anders Breivik and other would-be White messiahs.

"Here I am proudly posing with some Proud Boys," Haskell wrote in another post, which does show her posing proudly with members of the group now backstabbing one another to avoid FBI prosecution for the Jan. 6 Capitol rampage. The photo exemplifies the multiracial trend within patriot militias, like the GOP soliciting dark-skinned followers to prove they are not --oh, no-- racist.

Anders Breivik, the Norwegian mental defective bomb-and-shooter boy killed 77 people in Oslo and on the island of Utøya. 74 of his victims were Aryan Norwegian, 4 were Muslim immigrants. Oslo population today is 30% first- and second-generation immigrants. Killing 4 of them was apparently not enough. At trial, Breivik gave a Nazi salute from the dock, while his online manifesto, posted just before his narcissistic messiah shoot-em-up show, was read aloud.

Breivik was, among other things, also a Zionist.

He wrote his disjointed self-justification in high school English, common to many Norwegians who opt to elect English as a required foreign language in school curricula. Breivik wrote to assure his audience that he's no Nazi, despite expressing some sympathy for what Hitler had been trying to achieve. Instead he styles himself a latter-day warrior of the Knights Templar, vanguard force of the medieval Christian Crusades that briefly claimed the Holy Land for Christendom, who spilled the blood of those they saw as usurpers. Even then, it's worth remembering that the blood spilled by the Crusaders was both Muslim and Jewish.

Despite the Crusader lineage to which he aspires, however, Breivik has no intention of driving Jews from Europe, much less from the Holy Land. On the contrary, his manifesto hails Zionist Jews as a crucial ally in his battle between Christendom and Islam, proclaiming Israel as the frontline citadel in that war. Breivik's Crusade would have Jews on board for an existential fight against Islam; the mirror image of the "Crusader-Jewish" alliance that Osama bin Laden vowed to drive out of what he defined as Muslim lands.

In Breivik's own words: "Were the majority of the German and European Jews disloyal? Yes, at least the so called liberal Jews, similar to the liberal Jews today that opposes nationalism/Zionism and supports multiculturalism. Jews that support multiculturalism today are as much of a threat to Israel and Zionism (Israeli nationalism) as they are to us. So let us fight together with Israel, with our Zionist brothers against all anti-Zionists, against all cultural Marxists/multiculturalists. Conservative Jews were loyal to Europe and should have been rewarded. Instead, [Hitler] just targeted them all."

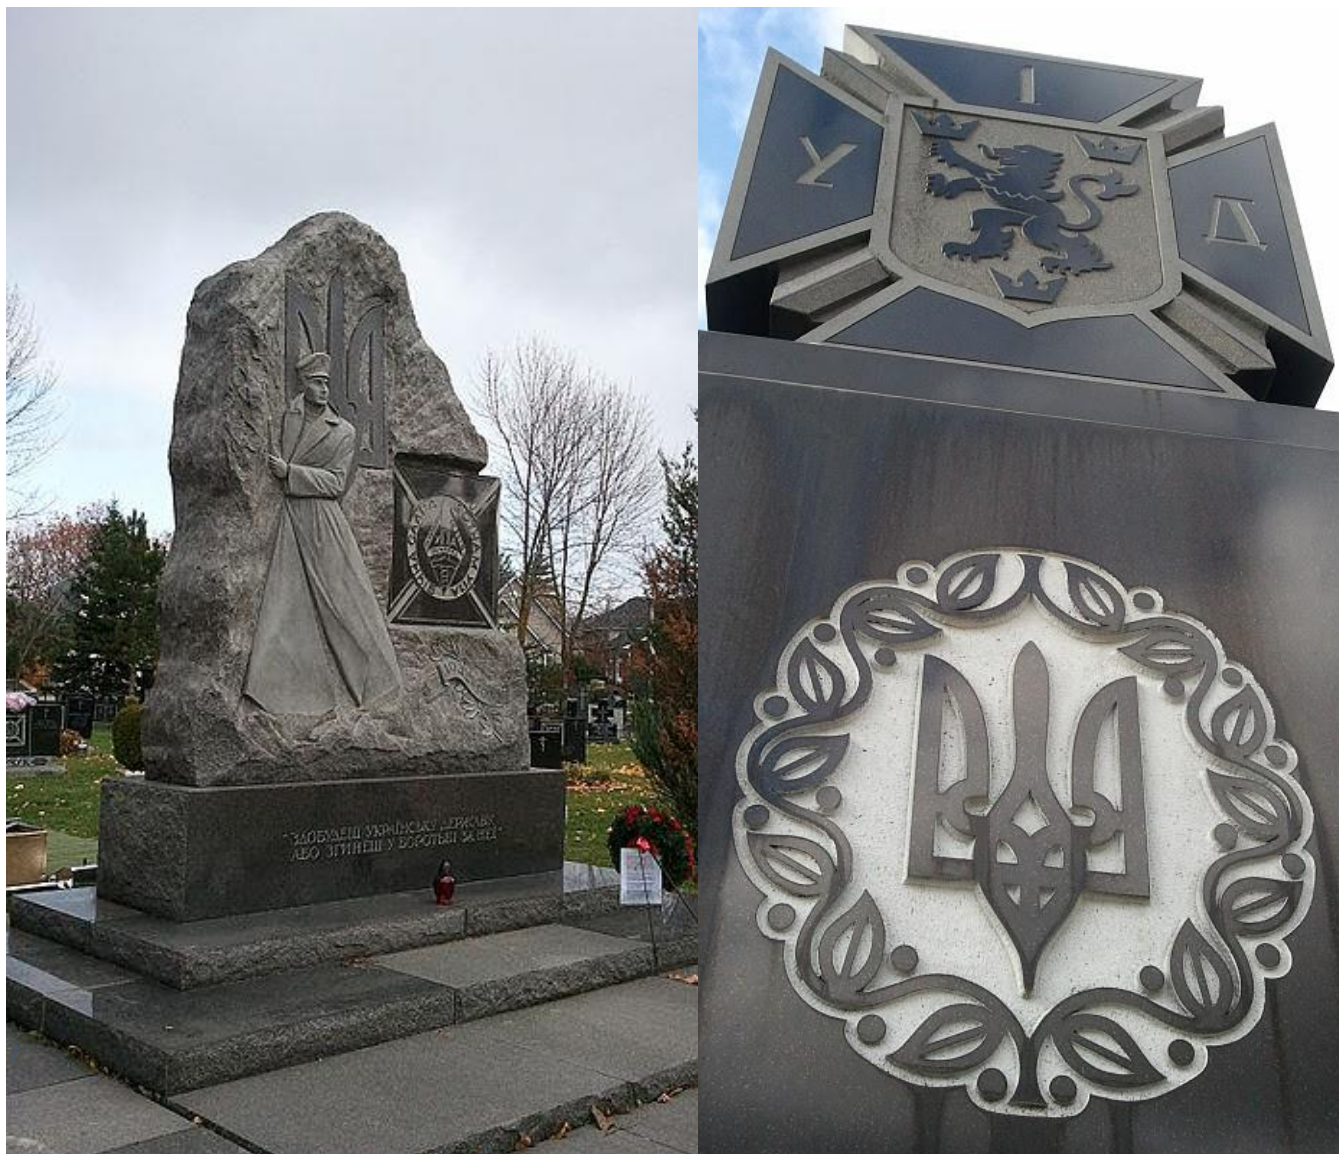

Breivik is the ultimate Proud Boy: semi-literate but always ready for adventures with guns, killing the White people he claims to love and protect. These egoist killers, naught but larping juveniles.

Fighting for our race is not a game, or a conspiracy, or a live shooting gallery. We cannot win by sitting on our butts and complaining, shouting back at the TV, becoming enraged, looking for equally pissed off allies, going out and converting other White people by SHOOTING better ideas into them with a gun. It is hard slogging work to win minds with intelligent argument. National-Socialism won Germany not through armed revolution but through the resolute work of education, propaganda, behavioral example we can each realize in and of ourselves.

Waffen-SS in Toronto -- The cenotaph at the St. Volodmyr Ukrainian Cemetery in Oakville, Ontario, just outside of Toronto, looks innocuous. Flanked by flagstaffs and set on a small, paved plateau, the monument is hardly out of the ordinary. Yet few Canadians may be aware that this memorial commemorates a major battle fought by the Ukrainian Galician Division of the Waffen-SS against the Soviet Red Army during the Second World War.

In June 2020, the stone cenotaph was vandalized and spray-painted with the words "Nazi war monument." Police initially began investigating the incident as a "hate-motivated" crime but issued a statement on July 17 to clarify that the incident is now being treated as vandalism.

This was not the first time the monument has come under fire. In 2017, the Russian Embassy to Canada was accused of fomenting division by posting comments online that the memorial glorifies Nazi history. In the context of Moscow's then-recent annexation of Crimea, however, Canadian media immediately dismissed this criticism as part of a Russian "disinformation campaign." Ihor Michalchysyn, executive director and CEO of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, denounced the comments as an attempt to "stir up controversy" and "obfuscate the [situation]" taking place in Europe at the time.

Now, of course, Jewish and left-wing groups are demanding the monument be torn down.

When John Demjanjuk, a Cleveland auto worker born in Ukraine, was extradited to Israel in 1986 to stand trial as a Nazi war criminal (accused of being a guard at Sobibor concentration camp and two others), the Ukrainian community rallied around him, denouncing the Jews as bloodthirsty revanchists indicting people on the thinnest evidence, especially as the numbers of German Nazis were dying off. After the show trial Demjanjuk was condemned to death, but two years later the Israeli supreme court had to overturn the verdict as the evidence was full of holes. There was no proof beyond the shadow of a doubt. Demjanjuk was released and went back to Cleveland.

So the Jews drummed up another charge to be tried in Germany. On May 12, 2011, aged 91, Demjanjuk was convicted as an accessory to the murder of 27,900 Jews at Sobibor and sentenced to five years in prison with two years already served. Presiding Judge Ralph Alt ordered Demjanjuk released from custody pending his appeal, as he did not appear to pose a flight-risk. This was the first time someone has been convicted solely on the basis of serving as a camp guard, with no evidence of being involved in the death of any specific inmate. His release pending appeal was protested by some, including Efraim Zuroff of the Simon Wiesenthal Center.

While waiting for return of his American citizenship papers, John Demjanjuk died at a home for the elderly in Bad Feilnbach, Germany on March 17, 2012, aged 91. As a consequence of his appeal not having been heard, Demjanjuk is still presumed innocent under German. The Ukrainian community stayed with him throughout his ordeal. His lawyers worked pro bono.

Ukrainians practice racial loyalty; they know how to fight for one another effectively.

Tuck 'em Up -- Tucker Carlson, Fox "News" pundit and military tactical genius, has backed Russia's argument that NATO enlargement was behind the current Ukraine crisis and accused the media of stoking tensions that could lead to an "incredibly destructive war with Russia." In a segment on Tuesday Jan. 11, the anchor introduced a clip in which MSNBC host Joe Scarborough demanded the Biden administration speak "more clearly and more aggressively" against Russia as concerns grow over its build-up of more than 100,000 troops on Ukraine's border. After the clip, Carlson mocked Scarborough, saying that "people that do that should not have TV shows and they certainly shouldn't be weighing in on adult topics like war and peace, but they are."

Tucks casually blubbered about "2 German divisions could go in there and have it all mopped up in a couple days like they did in World War Two. What are we getting involved for anyway?"

Tucks hero Trump did make some positive moves toward accommodating Russia and bringing it into the Western alliances, something recommended by Steve Bannon and others. That would keep Russia less paranoid and less threatening. But despite Trump's pandering to Putin, Russian ships played chicken with American cruisers at high speed mid-ocean, just to taunt. Fighter jets chased and spooked US Air Force fighters and transports, moving out ahead to generate wake turbulence for the Americans flying behind them. Trump was nothing more than a useful idiot to Russia. Tucker isn't valued quite so highly in that category. Useful turd, maybe.

Neo-Nazis Terrorize America! – On the day Black History Month began (Feb. 1, 2022), and in a few instances days before, some 22 bomb threats were phoned into to a number of Historical Black Colleges and Universities, threatening additional mayhem after the bombs went off as Nazis with guns enter the destroyed buildings and kill off survivors with automatic weapons. Horrors! The callers made a point to identify themselves as "neo-Nazis." Obviously scripted. The next day, swastikas were found drawn on every external pillar and post at Washington Union Station. Horrific! 16 exhibitionists on display in minimalist Nazi regalia in Orlando....horrible. 18 similar dunces in Boston at Brigham and Women's Hospital... scandal.

Turns out the bomb threateners were a bunch of bored teenagers playing a prank. The swastika artist was an illegal Mexican already twice deported. Tempests in teacups, yet again.

Attention Law Enforcement, Press and TV: Anyone who tells you he is a neo-Nazi isn't. If you want to talk to Nazis, contact the ANP, not these pathetic shapeshifters.

Twats on Twitter – Recent examples for your edification...printed here as published, warts, misspellings, and all:

I can't wait for the day that all the melanated people in the world acknowledge that white people are the minority. Decolonize the world.

How dare they. HOW FUCKING DARE THEY ! Ridiculous grown men playing dress up with there Ar15 assault weapons terrorizing our ICU covid nurses. DEPLORABLES ! I can't wait til white men are the minority. This has got to stop! I still can't think about the black jogger.

They say that white people will be a minority in this country as of 2050. I can't wait that long. And I'm a middle-aged white guy, so I can't even imagine what Black and brown people have to wait for.

I wholly agree with this. White people ARE the problem. I can't wait until we're the minority in this country. I can't wait for our government to not be disproportionally full of white men. Step aside. It's time for others to lead.

White people are the problem. There are probably other, lesser, takeaways from this election, too.

i can't wait till white ppl are the minority and eventually are wiped out the way they wiped out my people

Why are white people fascinated with this idea that minority people are sitting at home scheming up ways to illegally vote?? It's so strange. I been black my whole life and never met a black person sitting around talking bout can't wait to vote 5 times next week. Lol.

Speaking as the whitest of white dudes, I can't wait until we become a minority. We're complete assholes as a majority and have made life worse for millions of people, including ourselves.

I am a white woman, & I can't WAIT for the day I become the minority & people of color all over this country rise up to the occasion & expose our criminal government from the inside, just as AOC is doing. I am sickened by what white men have done to this country.

Awesome. Let them all in. I can't wait until White people are the minority in this country. -a White guy

Or worse yet public policy starts to be meaningfully influenced by long ignored and oppressed BIPOC voices. I personally can't wait till white voices are a minority in policy making.

I'm white & I can't wait for white people to become the minority. I'm so embarrassed & infuriated by white supremacists.

It's pathetic how threatened these white men feel, how afraid they are of losing their power to a young minority woman. I hope she inspires dozens of others just like her and I can't wait till old white men are in the minority of elected officials.

They actually track when it will happen and try quite hard to slow it down. I can't wait until white is in the minority and btw, I'm white... https://brookings.edu/blog/the-avenue/2018/03/14/the-us-will-become-minority-white-in-2045-census-projects/...

It's disgusting. But you know what? Those white people are on their last gasp of power. I can't WAIT for white minority.

Not all of us. Every GAY white dude I know voted Biden. And Hillary before. And Obama before that. But you're completely right. It IS white supremacy and domestic terrorism and I can't wait until white people are the minority in this country! It can't happen soon enough.

I can't wait until white people are the minority in this country. -a white guy

I moved to Mexico permanently and am laughing every day at the complaints of Mexicans and other Latin populations still going into the states. I can't wait until the white majority is the minority.

I'm consistently amazed by this whole debate. It's basically white people screaming about their coming obsolescence and they can't handle it. Personally I can't wait for white people to become the minority...and I'm white. I don't need supremacy to prove my worth.

I can't wait for white people to be the minority...and I'm white. Maybe then, these racists will have joined Trumps "space force" lol

If white men were ever in the minority they'd be whining for quotas Any of the candidates will be 'supremely' more qualified than Brett K and Amy CB and I can't wait to see who he picks

I'm sorry we lost, but I'm not sorry we fought for this. The generational struggle for a real multiracial democracy continues.

And Sinema will never win elective office again.
